College Graduate's Outlook Said Quite Promising

MINNEAPOLIS—Fantastic 1956 demand for engineering graduates hampered spring classroom sessions, lured away sorely needed technical instructors, and resulted in sharp practices by some recruiters. It boosted starting salaries considerably higher than earlier spring estimates — "unhealthily high" in the opinion of some placement officials, so high it has disturbed morale of already employed grads of previous years, whose advancement schedules have not kept pace.

The pleasantest light in this spring's graduate employment picture is the sun shining on the liberal arts man at long last, according to the family economics bureau of a leading national insurance company.

In the final report on its 21 annual survey of college placements, with salary tabulations pretty well completed, average base starting pay for newly-"minted" engineers is reported at around $420 at some technical schools, and as high as $450 at a few, compared with $390-$410 a year ago. Premiums for working schedules beyond 40 hours, graduate study assistance, free furniture moving for married grads, etc. bring actual pay offers considerably higher.

Women who majored in science or math have been in heavy demand as engineering assistants, physicists, even as well spotters and map drafters. Women liberal arts majors are being inducted into regular management training classes formerly limited to men, and career appointments in government.

Death Rays Destroy Terrible Termites

LOS ANGELES—A small black box which sends "death rays" into wood floors may be the answer to the household problem of destructive powder post beetles and termites.

Developed by Roy J. Pence, University of California entomologist, the death dealing unit utilizes infrared radiation to destroy the insects.

In field tests the infrared unit achieved complete kills of all development stages of powder post beetles, which have a fondness for expensive hardwood floors. Treatment of an area merely involves setting the box down and exposing the area to infrared radiation from five to ten minutes, depending on the thickness of the flooring.

The device is of simple construction, Pence says, and can be built cheaply in the workshop of any pest control operator. It consists of a light wooden cabinet and contains a battery and six standard infrared lamps.

Powder post beetles, which generally confine their activity within the limited thickness of a hardwood floor, have been particularly difficult to control.

Medicine Takers Should Not Drive Automobile

CHICAGO—Barbituates, antihistaminics, and stimulating or "tranquilizing" drugs being administered for a variety of diseases are vying with alcohol as highway hazards.

Dr. Walter J. R. Camp., professor of pharmacology and toxicology at the University of Illinois School of Medicine, says that in some instances patients should not drive because of the effect of the medication being taken.

"Alcohol in some ways is not the most dangerous since the effects of overindulgence are usually obvious," Dr. Camp points out, adding that "many persons of their own volition, or on advice of a physician, are taking drugs which have a definite effect on the central nervous system."

Termite Collection Includes Many Species

WASHINGTON — Got termites? The Smithsonian Institution has a collection of 230,000 specimens, including 1,286 distinct species of the approximately 2,000 known in the world.

This collection, probably the second most valuable of its kind in the world, represents the work of more than 46 years during which Dr. Thomas E. Snyder, retired Department of Agriculture entomologist, has collected termites in the Western Hemisphere and has also obtained many Old World species by exchange and gift. Among the specimens are 943 "type specimens"—individuals to which all others of the species must be referred for final identification.
